

Laknath Ashwin De Silva

I am a third-year PhD student in the Department of Biomedical Engineering at Johns Hopkins University where I am fortunate to be advised by Dr. Joshua Vogelstein, Dr. Pratik Chaudhari (UPenn), and Dr. Carey E. Priebe. I broadly work on {machine, deep} learning, with an aspiration to strive towards reducing the gap between machine and natural intelligence. My doctoral research is currently focused on learning under non-stationary distributions, out-of-distribution generalization, and robustness to distribution shifts. Outside of theoretical pursuits, I am passionate about tackling challenging problems in computer vision, biomedical data science, and cognitive neuroscience. My research has been featured in top venues such as ICML, NeurIPS, ECCV, ICASSP, CoLLAs, and SMC.
